Lockdown film review by Simon

School of Rock

Finding myself in the pandemic, I began looking for films that I had wanted to see for some time but hadn't really had the opportunity to do so until now. So I asked myself, what was I looking for in a film to watch in this current predicament?

School of Rock, directed by Richard Linklater and starring Jack Black, would also be a great choice during the pandemic if you haven't seen it already because no one's at school! Everyone's learning online. This hilarious comedy follows struggling guitarist and all round slacker Dewey Finn (Jack Black) who, after getting kicked out of his own band, disguises himself as a substitute teacher at a private school and shapes the children into his own band. Also ideal if you want a good laugh.
